need to class - all at a fraction of the bound book price. Written by John Forsyth of University at Albany, this manual features a Resource Integration Guide that links each chapter of the text to instructional ideas and corresponding supplemental resources. At a glance, the grid shows which selections from the text's teaching and learning ancillaries are appropriate for each key chapter topic--making it easy to transition from the previous edition or a different text to this one. The manual includes learning objectives, chapter outlines with overall summaries, key terms, and InfoTrac College Edition exercises. For hands-on applications, the manual has approximately 5 classroom activities/demonstrations/lecture topics; warning signs for identifying disorders; and exercises that correspond to the CNNr Today, Abnormal Psychology: Inside and Out, and Deficits of Mind and Brain videos. To take students beyond the text, the manual references supplementary reading materials, video and Internet resources, and transparency masters (including DSM-IV criteria) It also includes transition notes for users of Davison/Neale and Butcher/Mineka/Hooley's texts.
