In his opening chapter, the author writes: "This entire book is based on the conviction that there is a psychology of sex that begins, not with the way the sex organs are constructed (as so many sex books do), but with the fact that men and women are attractive to each other, that this kind of attractiveness attaches to a great deal more than the physical differences, and that attraction is selective: that is, one person is chosen from several or many when opportunity for choice is offered."
